

Welcome to this manuscript, which I believe contains original ideas and concepts.

As the title states, this is about the Age of transition, that we are currently living in.

During this work, I am looking to investigate and discuss the concept that we are living in an era between two distinct phases of human history.

In order to give credence to this concept, it is necessary to define these two distinct phases. Well one is in the past, and one is in the future. Let me further clarify, that I will be discussing known human history. I am open to the possibility, and perhaps likelihood, that we may have had advanced ancient civilisations which have simply disappeared. The past age, is what I like to call the Traditional human era. This is pre Industrial Revolution. It is an era, where humankind coexisted with nature without complicated machinery to assist with the process of living. It is pre steam engine, pre electricity, pre automobile and pre technology. It was the prominent era of our known human history. Cookery was simple and based on locally sourced seasonal products. Writing was done with a form of dye and paper. Travel was done by horse and carriage. Wars were fought with infantry and cavalry. Entertainment was mainly based on social interactions and music was played live. Money was based on the weight of precious metals, and inflation was largely static. This was a long and happy period for humankind. One could say it was life as God intended. At least in comparison to our Age of transition.

This leads me onto the next age - the Technological age. Now I have mentioned God, this is because I feel the concept of this book has a deep spiritual context. I feel that what separates the Age of Transition, with the Technological age is societal stability. Furthermore I feel that the Technological age, controversially will compete with the Traditional age as a time of life as God intended. This idea, that the Technological age is a divine period could appear perverse in our era of global warming, cruel wars and rampant crime. Perhaps what makes the coming age divine, is that it will be a period of long term peace among the inhabitants of Earth. Even the Traditional age contained many wars.

That is the premise, and now we will delve further. We will discuss the three epochs, their significant values and liabilities. We will make them contextual in terms of spirit and God. We will discuss when and how we will enter the next age, and signs to look for. Really I feel this Age of transition is incredibly important spiritually, I feel it is a time when many souls incarnated due to its pivotal nature. Make no mistake the Age of transition required the most bravery among souls.

I would like to discuss the structure that this work will take. First of all, I feel I would like to define the Traditional phase was 1000 BC to 1760 - the start of the Industrial revolution. The Age of Transition is thus 1760 - current age. The technological age will be from the current age to the future. The actual year when the Technological age is not known, but I intend to give some clues as to when it will be.

There will be three distinct sections to this book, each one dealing with that specific epoch. In these sections I will discuss the prominent features of the age, more clearly - money, wars, governance, travel, work, home, food etc. From this analysis we can determine if the Age of Transition stands out on its own, as a significant historical relevance in terms of display the features of a transitional age.

In terms of the Technological age we will attempt to discuss its features that makes sense in terms of long term stability, given current technological trends.
